Corporal Murphy stopped in Denver between trains on his way back to Indiana long enough to tell what he thought was the worst hard luck story that had crossed his experience in his military career.

"There was a sergeant in the Ninth artillery," he said, "who served his three years and then re-enlisted in Manila. He got his travel pay both ways, which for a sergeant made $600 to $700. He served only a month or two when he got sick and was discharged for disability. He got more travel pay then, and started for home Francisco he took sick and died, and the money will go to a cousin he never saw in his life.
"If that wasn't bad luck," said Cofporal Murphy, "I hope I'll never meet.
